Description:

Output Israel Putnam. Hero of the Wolf-Den History, from its beginning, gives us many examples of men substituting their resources and energy for lack of education. Placed in strange and perflous positions, where education alone would have meant but little, they have used their natural abilities in a most remarkable way.

Some were called to open the vast wilderness, some to conquer the Indians, and others to save in wars. Israel Putnam was one of these men who shows held a special committee meeting at St. able way.

The farmers succeeded in capturing most of the young and she was nearly caught, when her foot was fastened to a trap, but she escaped by tearing the claw from her foot. One night, this she-wolf made an onslaught on Putnam's stock. Killing seventy of the sheep and goats and wounding many others. Putnam was appalled. He and several other men formed a party for the capturing of her. Fortunately, a light snow had fallen enabling them to trace her tracks by the wounded foot as far as the Connecticut river and then back to within three miles of Putnam's farm, where her den was located.

Soon the news had soread, bringing other men with guns and sulphur for smoking her out. The whole day was spent in trying to dislodge her from her dogs returned painfully wounded and refused to enter the cave again. The sulphur proved useless.

Putnam asked his negro servant to go
